An independent documentary search for the real-life people behind the characters in Archie comics.

SHORT SYNOPSIS

The filmmaker, a devoted Archie fan, makes an independent documentary search for the real-life people behind the characters in the ever-popular Archie comics. Were Archie, Betty, Veronica, Moose, and Jughead based on actual students whom Bob Montana, the original Archie cartoonist, knew in high school in the 1930s in Haverhill, Massachusetts?

SYNOPSIS

Archie's Betty is an independent documentary search by journalist and filmmaker Gerald Peary to determine if the characters in Archie comics—Archie, Betty, Veronica, Moose, Jughead, etc.-- were modeled on real-life people. As an Archie-obsessed child, Peary believed that somewhere in America there was a real town of Riverdale, where Archie and his teen friends went to school. As an adult, he found that his fantasy might have basis in fact. Riverdale could be the city of Haverhill, Massachusetts, where Bob Montana, the original cartoonist of Archie, attended high school in the mid-1930s.

Did Montana love Haverhill High so much that he based Archie characters on students in his classes? Was Archie inspired by a girl-crazy Haverhill High cutup? Was Veronica modeled on the most popular girl at the high school? Was Betty based on the girl living next door to young Bob? And what of Moose and Jughead?

For Archie's Betty, Peary meets with Montana's surviving classmates, a veteran Archie cartoonist, and Archie experts to unravel the real story. The search culminates at a senior living facility in Edison, New Jersey. Might a 91-year-old woman living there, far from Haverhill, be the basis for one of Archie Comics' immortal characters?

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

As an Archie-obsessed child, a Jewish boy growing up in the 1950s segregated South, I dreamed of living in the real "Riverdale," the All-American, mythic town depicted in Archie comics. Many years later, as an adult, I discovered that my childhood fantasy was not absurd at all. In 1988, I read a letter in a newspaper asserting that Archie's Riverdale was modeled after the real town of Haverhill, Massachusetts. That's where Archie's original cartoonist, Bob Montana, had lived and gone to school. Riverdale High was actually, the letter claimed, Montana's Haverhill High.

That was "a Proustian moment," taking me instantly back to my childhood, where I had lived for Archie comic books. I just couldn't believe that, residing in Haverhill, were people who had inspired the Archie characters. A real Archie? A real Veronica and Betty? A real Moose and Jughead? I was commissioned by the Boston Globe to write about the "Haverhill Connection" and Archie comics. I spent many weeks in Haverhill speaking with those who'd gone to high school with the late Montana, and also with Peg Bertholet, the cartoonist's widow. As for Haverhillites, they were eager to suggest real-life people--students, teachers, and administrators of Haverhill High—who inspired the Archie characters.

ARCHIE'S BETTY

My April 10, 1988, Boston Globe Sunday Magazine story was the first major article to argue for the validity of the Haverhill-is-Riverdale theory. The character of Archie Andrews seems to be based on a girl-crazy Haverhill High cut-up. Veronica could be the most popular girl at the high school. Betty appeared to be the girl who lived next door to young Bob. I also proposed Haverhillites for Jughead, Moose, Miss Grundy. In 1988, I left Haverhill behind for more than 20 years, convinced that I'd solved the Archie mystery.

In 2010, a comic book expert named Shaun Clancy contacted me. He said that my Globe research was not entirely accurate. It needed updating. So, decades after the newspaper article, I renewed my investigation of the origin of the Archie characters — this time making a documentary film. Clancy and I become producing partners.

In Archie's Betty, I incorporate Clancy's detective work, meet with Archie experts and Montana's still-surviving Haverhill classmates. My 25-year journey culminates at a senior living facility in Edison, New Jersey. Might a 91-year-old woman living there be the basis for one of Archie Comics' immortal characters?
